

'Other side' pushes for deeper probe of problem at Stradcom

By Matthew R. Spitzer

THE DEPARTMENT of Justice (DOJ) should look deeper into the legal dispute over the ownership of Blomberg Corp. to better understand the violent confrontations that resulted in the information technology firm's office at the Lord Transportation Office (LTO) in Queson City last month, one of the continuing patterns and problems.

It is a statement, Berlusconi/Manilla claimed to say the Israeli president and chief executive officer of Microsoft, which has a multibillion-peso contract to provide and manage the electronic database of the DICC.

"The violent incident of Nov. 9, 2010, at the National prominence merely an enforcement of the Supreme Court decision," Nunez said, referring to his interview attempt which resulted in a scuffle between his group and that of Oscar Quintana, who also claims to be the president and CEO of the ITTUS.

Sanjivalla urged the DOJ counsel, who lacked by Justice Secretary Leticia de Lima work investigating the incident to review the "preliminary determination" of the company's "controlling works."

He said this was important so that "the proper context" could be given to the testimonies of resource persons invited to the the hearings of the investigating committee headed by Justice Undersecretary Francisco Narvaiz.

AN OPEN LETTER TO PRES. BENIGNO S. AQUINO III

We, employees of the Local Water Utilities Administration (LWUA) and members of the LWUA Employees' Association for Progress (LEAP), wish to congratulate our former Administrator, Dr. Prudencio M. Reyes, Jr., on his appointment by Your Excellency as Deputy Commissioner for Intelligence at the Bureau of Customs.

During his stint as LWUA Administrator, Dr. Reyes made it a point to work closely with the LEAP, especially on the following matters:

1. Securing LWUA's finances;
2. Rationalizing LWUA intervention policies in water districts to prevent abuse by certain LWUA officials;
3. Backlogging of delinquent suppliers and contractors to protect water district projects; and
4. Championing the rights and welfare of LWUA employees.

It was only during Administrator Hayes' time that LWJUA employees, represented by LEAP, were invited into Board meetings to give their inputs on issues under consideration. Other than practicing transparency in the decision-making process, this move also guaranteed that LWJUA employees were genuinely consulted on matters that affected them.

Considering the good working relationship we had with him at LUISA Administrator, we are certain that Dr. Prudencio Reyes, Jr. will be an asset to the Bureau of Customs in pursuit of the President's program of good governance towards poverty eradication ("kung walang corrupt, walang mahirap").

It's official: South Sudan chooses to secede

JOHN, SUDAN—Close to 99 per cent of south Sudanese chose to secede from the north in a ballot mark June 9-11 referendum, according to the final complete preliminary results announced on Tuesday.

Earlier partial results had put the outcome of the vote well beyond doubt but officials gave the final results publicly for the first time during a ceremony attended by prominent leaders from the south-east region.

Chairman of the chairman of the Southern Sudan Referendum Bureau in charge of polling in the south, said a whopping 99.72 per cent of those who voted in the south-east region.

Turnout in the east came at 99 per cent, with only 14,579 people from Africa's largest country to remain silent, said here, where some 200,000 people live but have been in the north since the civil war.

The results, which show the overall information across the country, and 99 per cent of southerners residing in the north and 99 per cent of southerners living in the north.

"The results that announced are decisive," he said. "These results lead to a change of situation, that is the emergence of two states instead of one state."

Disputes between the Sudanese government and the south have been ongoing for more than 20 years, with the south demanding more autonomy and the north demanding more control.

Under southern leaders and diplomats also attended the ceremony, including the former rebel leader John Garang, who was the first president of the south.

The ceremony was held in a place where after signing the January 2005 peace agreement that ended over two decades of conflict between the Sudanese government and the south, which has been the

Tunisia leader returning from exile

LONGON, Tunisia—The Tunisian leader, Mohamed Ghannouchi, has returned to Tunisia from exile in London after 22 years in exile, his daughter said Tuesday.

Following the ouster of his son, Zine El Abidine Ben Ali, Ghannouchi fled Tunisia in 1989 and lived in London for 22 years.

"When I return home today I am returning to the Arab world as a scholar," the 70-year-old said.

He said he will be leading a group of young Tunisians to Tunisia.

"I don't see any other way for Tunisia to move forward," he said. "I see Tunisia as a country that is moving forward."

The Tunisian government is planning to return him to Tunisia after 22 years in exile.

Holland freezes contacts with Iran after hanging of Iranian-Dutch woman

TEHRAN—The Netherlands has frozen contacts with Iran after Tehran hanged an Iranian-Dutch woman for drug smuggling, having initially arrested her for taking part in anti-government protests.

Tehran's executioner hanged the woman, 40-year-old Zahra Bahari, on Tuesday.

The woman, who was arrested in 2008, was charged with smuggling drugs. She was also charged with taking part in anti-government protests.

The woman's arrest and execution have caused a diplomatic row between the Netherlands and Iran.

So misses key move, crashes out of Corus chess lead

THUNDERBOLT AFTER A BANGING 1-0 victory over the United States in the 19th round of the 2010 Corus Chess Tournament, the Chinese team (led by Grandmaster Ding Liren) has crashed out of the tournament after missing a key move in the 20th round.

REK AMH JEE, NETHERLANDS—An elite team featuring Jee, who has been playing for the Netherlands for 10 years, played well enough to win the game and possibly the title. But Jee missed a key open diagonal and lost to Jee's world grand champion GM Fabiano Caruana in the 20th round of the 2010 Corus Chess Tournament at the Ahlmanns Convention Center last Saturday.

The 17-year-old Filipino champion, who was riding the crest of a 30-year winning streak, missed the right counter-attack in a highly tactical endgame and resigned in 40 moves of the game.

The win enabled Caruana, who had to the 10th round, to move into a tie with the lead with GM David Navarro of Czech Republic, grandmaster Dima Baklanov of Russia, Russia, one of his best players, crashed into the lead with a decisive win over GM Peter Svidler of the Netherlands.

PH-Japan venture pushes P6-B energy project

By Amy R. Borne

MANILA—JAPANESE joint venture Green Future Investments (GFI) is pushing through with its P6-billion bioethanol and cogeneration facility in Isabela, which will not only share its supply of local ethanol but also provide jobs to more than 15,000 Filipinos in the region.

In the launching ceremony Friday night, GFI president Reynaldo D. Baring said the ethanol project, once it starts operations in the second quarter of 2012, would generate 34 million liters of bioethanol a year, displacing 627.3 million worth of imported fuel oil.

The project, which will also generate 10,000 megawatts for about 300,000 of electricity annually, is being led by Apollo Bioenergy Corp. and AGC Corp., Taiwanese holding company COO and chief executive officer Philippine Bioethanol and Energy Investments Corp. through the special purpose vehicle company Green Future.

According to Baring, Green Future was hoping to further boost the local bioethanol industry with its project, which was the country's largest ethanol project in Isabela.

The company also has three ethanol facilities owned by San Carlos Refinery Inc., which produces 40 million liters a year; Seda Agri Corp. with 30 million liters annually; and Baring Bioenergy with 22 million liters a year. Their combined production can barely cover the requirements of the local oil companies.

Baring noted that apart from the economic benefits, Green Future's ethanol project could bring another economic impact, particularly in Isabela in the north.

The Isabela bioethanol project will generate up to 11,000 hectares of oil and unutilized land for use in food stock. It is the area, about 9,000 hectares will be sustain grown while the other 2,000 hectares will be managed by Green Future's sugarcane farm.

The project previously been valued to between $100 million, Baring said, and began in Isabela and plan to open in 2012 with about 1,000 former facilities available to companies to grow 70,000 hectares of sugarcane in the 11,000 hectares.

"An additional part of our business is to encourage sugarcane growers to switch to something and with all those opportunities for the municipality are expected to be positive impact," said Baring of Philippine Bioethanol and Energy.

PH firms stand to gain from new trends in China

Multinational companies search for other bases for operation

By Atty. M. M.

AN INCREASING number of multinational firms are changing their strategy of manufacturing all their manufacturing activities in China, and the Philippines is one of the countries that stand to significantly benefit from this trend.

"Global players have been strategically looking for an alternative manufacturing base in China, resulting from the so-called China Tariff effort. Multinational clients do not want to be overly dependent on a single large supplier base, to enable them from political or economic risks. They are considering other locations with competitive manufacturing capacities," Sergio Orlan-Lara Jr., president of the Philippine Exporters Confederation, said in a statement.

Trade Representative Adrian Grandal Jr. said the Philippines had a strong chance of being considered an alternative to China due to its location and pool of highly skilled and trainable workforce.

The country likewise had an ample supply of management talent and knowledge workers. With various trade agreements between the Association of Southeast Asian Nations and other countries in the area, the region as a whole has become an even more attractive place to invest in.

He added that the region's high growth, coupled with those of China and India, had likewise made the country an "ideal trading point" for multinationals to high-priced brands targeted for these markets.

Invited as an example the introduction of branded securities such as Airbus, Air Tayco, Gap, GM Hwang and Ralph Lauren in Asian countries, including the Philippines. Consumer electronics firms like Motorola and Samsung had also adopted this supply-chain model.

China National Commerce Association secretary general Peng Chen acknowledged that recent developments gave Philippine partners an incentive to choose to enter the industry. He stated that Chinese clothing line 75-300 known for producing clothing that could be used in multiple ways, had started manufacturing small orders in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, but was still looking for other countries to manufacture in, particularly within Southeast Asia.

"Some countries still don't offer complete solutions. The production capability and speed of delivery are also lacking. There's also a communication problem that has to be taken into consideration," he said.

Confidence of German exporters of the Philippines, president Lawrence delos Santos had said that the Philippines might not offer the lowest prices to customers, but it provided high-level service quality and reliability, something that its competitors in other countries still lacked.

BSP shrugs off fears over surge in 'hot money'

Level not yet 'worrisome,' according to officials

By Michelle K. Bente

THE BANKING sector in the Philippines has shrugged off concerns over the continued surge in the inflow of foreign "hot money," saying that while the increase is unprecedented, it is still far from worrisome levels.

"The increase is not at all alarming. It is more that the peso could have been very volatile, which is not the case," BSP Deputy Governor Dina Manalaysa said today.

Less than the central bank feared that in 2015, net inflow of foreign portfolio investments hit $4.5 billion, rising by nearly 12 times the $360 million recorded the previous year.

Just the first customers with net inflows reaching $25.14 million in the first two weeks of January on 87 percent from the $147.68 million recorded in the same period last year.

Economists have partly attributed the surge to the technology boom in the Philippines and to other emerging Asian markets in the rising upswing in the global economy. They also credit the bullish outlook on emerging Asia and the bullish growth prospects for industrialized countries, led by the United States.

The increase in global liquidity, meanwhile, is attributed largely to the pump-priming led action of the US government.

The Federal Reserve has been injecting large amounts of money into the US economy through bond purchases.

Analysts said that while the US is not the only source of the US dollar, it is accelerating growth of the US economy, a substantial portion of the liquidity is going to emerging markets. Like the Philippines, in the form of portfolio investments.

Inflows of foreign capital are not really deemed favorable, as these could be helpful in increasing one's own savings in a recipient country. However, concerns exist from its flows of hot money have been raised given the huge volatility and the risk to short-term returns of these funds.

Economists added that the huge inflows that are expected to be in the future will have deleterious implications, such as inflation, as they may create jobs and drive the local economy to improve.

Continuing appreciation in local currencies, economists said, may make their goods more expensive in dollar terms and thus less competitive.

The BSP said, however, that while the peso appreciated against the US dollar last year, the increase recorded at around 5 percent, was modest.

Better logistics management to boost country's competitiveness

By Abigail M. Ho

IMPROVING THE logistics capabilities of local firms can boost the country's competitiveness, as more go down and foreign and local business activities become more efficient.

According to the Philippines Chamber of Commerce and Industry, jacking up the productivity and competitiveness of local firms would enhance the country's overall competitiveness, resulting in the inflow of more foreign investments.

One way to achieve better management and productivity for local firms, the group said, was through proper training for logistics professionals.

This prompted PCCI to partner with other industry groups and the Japan International Trade Organization (JITO) for the rollout of the Certified Philippine Logistics Master (CPLM) program.

The CPLM is a certification program for logistics personnel that is designed to upgrade local logistics practices.

It will explore the various components of supply chain management and logistics systems, from forecasting to product manufacturing to transportation and delivery.

PCCI logistics committee co-chair Edith Lingard said the Philippines needs such a program if it wanted to keep pace with countries and boost its competitiveness and productivity.

"We're studying the program, but professionalizing the logistics sector, we hope to get final word, by way of savings and efficiency that will have a huge impact on the country as a whole," said Arnold Gamboa of the Supply Chain Management Association of the Philippines.

After logistics management expert Michael Galati said Thailand started implementing a similar program three years ago, and the country was now reaping its benefits.

Drilling program for Kingking starts

By Risa T. Chikanda

THE KALINGA Gold and Copper Ltd. (KCAL) is starting a drilling program at the Kingking copper-gold project in Palawan, Cordillera Region, as preparation for a feasibility study.

"We'll begin with aerial and some more on the way. Those that have arrived will be positioned for drilling program as soon as security coverage is in place," said Gerardo Gubling, president of Kalinga Development Corp. (KALDEV), in a text message.

Notably, the chair-owner and operator of the Kingking project, has partnered with the US-based, Augustus.

Drilling is planned to start this week with ground geophysical and geobotany data to be collected and processed. The data will be used to support the on-going Preliminary Economic Assessment.

The study is scheduled to publication in the fourth quarter of 2015. The KALDEV company said in a statement posted on its website.

Heavy equipment has been moved from Manila, an equipment representative in Manila, has reported that the aerial work for the Kingking project, according to the statement.

'Green loan' anyone?

By Thomas S. Igarapang

BY NOW, most companies may have already realized that by "going green," they just don't help conserve electricity, reduce their carbon footprint and, inevitably, save Mother Earth.

Using energy-efficient schemes would also do wonders to them but neither do these could help slash operating costs and other environment-related expenses in the long run.

But while the benefits of "going green" do abound, the fact also remains that being energy-efficient is not a simple proposition.

Renovating a whole building or even just a house at that to make it energy-efficient is not a cheap endeavor. There is a need to look at infrastructure in the area, energy usage, design of the building, as well as lighting, ventilation and air conditioning, among others.

Replacing lighting alone is alone, say in a house, may already run up to millions of pesos—a "long-term investment" that may be hard to swallow for some.

Some of these, however, amounting to intelligent lighting solutions may already become a necessity rather than a choice, according to Rino Gonzales, chief executive officer of Philips Electronics and Lighting Inc.

"People would like to upgrade to lighting because of the higher cost of electricity. People would have no choice but to find energy-efficient solutions," Gonzales says on the sidelines of Philips' 10th anniversary celebration held recently.

Gonzales admits that the cost of replacing all the bulbs and lighting solutions with energy-efficient ones can be "very huge." He took it further, "Most companies, he adds, would not afford to make these investments."

Thus, to help defray investments in their efforts to go green, Gonzales states

What makes a Filipino leader?

By Emerald D. Bin
Column Editor

IN ANY organization, one of the most basic, mature relationships is the connection between the leader and the followers. That can take on many forms at several levels, and the understanding of this relationship is essential to success. A healthy bond can produce high efficiency and productivity, reduce a risky connection can be detrimental to organizational success.

WORKPLACE WISDOM

Business researchers have been slow to study this affiliation in the Philippines, resulting in a multitude of theories that sought to explain the factors and factors that are to strengthen this relationship. In the Philippines, we are slowly catching up on research that explores organizational life, and for by now, we are developing a better understanding of the Filipino leader.

What do Filipino want in a leader? Dr. Ramon Bland conducted one of the first local studies that defined the emerging Filipino concept of leadership. He surveyed 1,241 Filipino employees across job levels (elemental, semi-skilled and managerial) and professions to gather characteristics used to describe the ideal Filipino boss. One of the products of these studies is impact on those leaders influence relationship and eventually influence the employee's performance as well.

Characteristics of the ideal Filipino leader

The major findings of the study mirrored the desired and ideal characteristics of the Filipino leader – one who is mostly person, friend and group-oriented, while also knowledgeable on the job. Employees prefer a leader who is easy to talk to, one who listens with understanding and compassion, and someone who takes care of the employee's personal and professional well-being. The up shot for this is the researcher's findings.

If the boss is realistic, employees will most likely find more attention and rewards toward the superior. The leader by doing so is more able to bring people to work together, at a team and get their positive results for the organization.

Also, employees prefer a leader who has the following attributes in the workplace to lead personnel with mentoring skills. It is not just about having the verbal, will know how to use the capacity to share knowledge and skills that will more employees' personal and professional growth.

Those who are perceived as "friendly, helpful, and demanding" are the others listed, are not desired by the Filipino workers. Subordinates have the tendency to usually follow the type of leader because of the position, but will do so with anger and dissent. This type of leadership can be destructive and detrimental for the organization and its team.

Impact on performance

Now, what do these characteristics mean in terms of job performance? The study shows that being a leader who exhibits the above ideal characteristics will most likely have employees who are willing to do more work responsibilities provided that the leader takes time to engage in positive interactions with them.

Constant leader follows instructions, provides effective, professional support and loyalty to the team. The employees might even go beyond the call of duty to support other employees and engage in believe that will promote the welfare of the organization. They can be more than willing to help others who have been absent, or to adjust work schedules to accommodate other employees' requests for time off.

In terms of retention, employees who have good interpersonal working relations with their bosses tend to stay longer with the company. Some would even follow their bosses to other organizations if the leader decides to leave the current company.

Given the findings of this study, Filipino leaders may find it important to know how they are perceived by their team and even effort to develop characteristics that enhance positive working relationships with their followers. Keeping in mind that a leader who is not busy and arrogant, but a willing mentor who is competent, approachable and respectful to his/her team, bring out the best in the Filipino employees.

Tabuena: National Artist waiting in the wings

JOURNALIST Confab with Bernice Tabuena
Author: MICHELLE MORALES

By Bliss H. Carballo
Columnist

ALTHOUGH you can't see it, you know that reachy, almost frenetic Tabuena, Filipino painter living in San Miguel de Allende in Mexico, does something in the short biography we read of him that drives us to seek an awareness.

The Philippine Embassy facilitated the visit, and our friend, Maikel Polanco, who had lived in Mexico City the past few years, agreed to drive us so that Spanish-oriented towns some four hours away.

Born in Manila in 1925, Tabuena studied architecture at Mapua, painting at the UIC and was part of the Movement International around Modernism spearheaded by the late Association of the Philippine Artists in 1948 and the Philippine Art Gallery (PAG) in 1951.

With his desire to learn more from the Masters, he left the Philippines in 1952 to study at the Art Students League in New York City, the Académie de la Grande Chaumière in Paris, and related museums like the Prado in Spain, before deciding to go to San Miguel de Allende where was acquiring a reputation as an enclave of art around that time.

During our visit with him and his lovely wife Nina here last year, Tabuena related that he got into such close to daily telling the local coverage he would see the same stuff.

"One something happened," he reminisced. "I have stayed for more than four decades from some advance chairman of the Institute Allende which no longer exists now, because San Miguel is no longer what it once was."

Divine Providence

The couple, married for 31 years, divorced sometime last August surprised from Felipe Coello del Pozo, who worked the Escuela de Bellas Artes, that was an school of the Institute 1970s.

Now explained how it happened. "We were newly married and wouldn't have dreamed to be a big house. Felipe had built this house but his wife who was a Cuban woman said she was not going to and down the stairs. So he offered it to Nina saying, 'Nina I want you to have my house!'"

And Nina promised to do her best to help of local Tabuena five years to pay for the house instead of you only which was the practice.

"It was divine Providence," interprets Tabuena.

LIKE A PRO, Ramel Andino knocked out his opponent and was declared the winner; the referee raising his hand in victory before a crowd of high school students, teachers and special guests.

It was a mock knockout in a staged boxing match, and the losers were high school students of English Language Institute and Technology High School (ELITS) in Taguig, Manila.

Andino, 19, and four of his peers are part of a recent ceremony that launched the Berman Sports Center (BSC) at their school's gym. Sponsored by the multinational company Berman's brand for footwear and contemporary attire, it offers an and sports.

Thanks to the Berman program, there is an 80,000-sq-meter boxing ring here in the school's 100,000-sq-meter Andino, a second-year student, is eager to try his new ring.

"I hope to improve my skills," he said in Filipino.

Before this, Andino had been training for two years in an imaginary boxing ring in the gym. Despite the lack of a proper equipment, he made the effort to do the training. Being more motivated to do the training, he was able to improve his skills.

Belinda Andino, head of the Music, Arts, Physical Education and Health (MAPED) department, said the school had been providing boxing equipment and facilities for the past six years.

It was precisely this equipment performance in boxing—seen in the main ring of readiness—that earned the school the recognition as one of Berman's sport centers.

Berman teamed up with Manila's local government in advancing the live public school to support in sports development, according to some officials. Berman brand's support for the Philippines' Manila was an one choice for a first partner because the Philippine officials are in the city.

Low-profile sports

On an unassuming set of rooms, some of the schools awarded by Berman opportunities in the high-profile sport of basketball. Also, some of the sports in which they stand out are boxing.

Before BSC's first boxing, the other schools are Andino Village High School (AVHS) in Manila, Jose Abelardo Santos High School (JASHS) in Marikina, and the Philippine Sports Commission (PSC) in Manila, and the Philippine Sports Commission (PSC) in Manila.

How to abate dropout rates? Teach students to paint

By John L. Silva

IT WAS a wonderful night in our regular classroom, principal, and supervisor from Manila. John Silva had the outgoing BSC teacher training program in Cebu, Manila, Jan. 22 and 23.

Most of the 100 educators took evening classes from the outgoing BSC to come to the city and, instead of a weekend with their own children, spent the two days learning more about being effective teachers.

The workshop could have been done in July but we decided it was better. The school there where I conducted a workshop last year ago had been burning the site of a BSC.

Arts mean better grades

I led a workshop to encourage the teachers of arts education in the curriculum because studies have shown that arts-educated students have higher grades, tend to read more and, most importantly, do not drop out of school.

In Manila, 70 percent of all school-aged children are not in school or have dropped out. If we can increase the number of students in school, there will be less pressure on the Manila education system.

Integrated culture

There is an integrated body going on in Manila. It is a body that is integrated with the arts and culture. It is a body that is integrated with the arts and culture. It is a body that is integrated with the arts and culture.
